

Elaine Waxman is a senior fellow in the Income and Benefits Policy Center at the Urban Institute and co-director of the Institute's From Safety Net to Solid Ground initiative. Her expertise includes food insecurity, nutrition, the food assistance safety net and social determinants of health disparities, as well as broader issues affecting low-income families and communities. Prior to joining the Institute, Waxman served for six years as the Vice President of Research and Nutrition at Feeding America, where she oversaw research on food insecurity and nutrition, federal nutrition programs, the intersection of hunger and health, and the circumstances and experiences of individuals seeking charitable food assistance. Waxman has co-authored numerous research and policy reports and articles in scholarly journals, including a recent article on SNAP benefit adequacy in the Agricultural and Resource Economics Review, which was named ARER Best Paper 2019. She received her MPP and her PhD from the University of Chicago, where she is currently a lecturer at the Crown Family School of Social Work, Policy and Practice.
